

Women Empowerment

Women empowerment means to make women independent so that they can take important decisions of life by themselves. They must have the ~~ex~~ right to live their life as they want. From so many years, women suffered a lot and they were treated as they have no existence. They had to think a hundred times before doing any thing. All the major life decisions were taken by the men in the family.

But as the time evolved, some women ~~who~~ who are educated started fighting for their rights and freedom and this ^{came} began an inspiration for other women. Then the chain started and thus began the revolution for women empowerment.

An empowered and educated women is more like a burden to the family. She becomes a supporter or helper for her family as well as the society. She strengthens her family ~~as well as the~~ ^{and} she is able to help them financially as well. She also has the capability to empower other women. She can also educate her children so that they can also Know their rights and become aware about their duty as a responsible citizen. Thus, an empowered woman can actually empower the whole society. That is why women empowerment is the need of society as well as the nation.

It is the responsibility of the government as well as every individual to empower women. The most important step towards it is to educate the girls so that they can be aware about their rights and become free to take their life decisions. Awareness programs are also organised in the villages by the government and many NGO's so that women in the villages become aware and break the boundaries in their life. Similarly, we all have to take this responsibility and stand together for women empowerment. As Kofi Annan said, "There is no tool for development more effective than the empowerment of women." It is absolutely true that a nation cannot develop without the contribution of the women.
